

Kick-off meeting held in Tallinn to plan next steps of Circular Design Training program

On September 30th, 2024, representatives from LAB University of Applied Sciences and the Estonian Design Centre gathered to collaboratively plan the next phase of the joint project. The meeting brought together project team members from both organisations to refine the implementation strategy and define concrete actions for the upcoming stages.

The kick-off meeting took place at the Estonian Design Centre's office, located in the Telliskivi area — a dynamic and creativity-driven district in Tallinn known for its vibrant atmosphere and innovative spirit. The setting provided an ideal backdrop for forward-thinking discussions and collaborative planning.

The day was marked by productive dialogue around the project's objectives, timelines, and key deliverables. Special attention was given to aligning the planned activities with the overarching goal of supporting designers in transitioning toward more sustainable and circular practices.

This in-person meeting provided a valuable opportunity to strengthen cross-border collaboration, clarify roles and responsibilities, and ensure a shared understanding of the project's direction. The joint planning session laid a solid foundation for the next steps and reinforced the partners' commitment to advancing design-led sustainability through education and innovation.
